DO YOU HAVE A TEENAGER IN MIDDLE SCHOOL OR HIGH SCHOOL WHO HAS A DISABILITY?

Researchers at the Vanderbilt Kennedy Center are conducting a study on how teenagers navigate the process of disability identity development.

WHO? We are looking for participants who are 12-17 in middle school or high school to participate in a research study about disability identity.

WHAT? Participants will be involved in an interview up to 45 minutes and will complete a brief 10 minute survey. Interviews can be completed via phone, zoom or in-person.

WHY? Your voluntary participation will help us accomplish our goal of understanding how teens view or feel about their disability.

Note: There is no monetary compensation for this study.

If you have any follow up questions or are interested in participating contact: Dr. Anjali Forber-Pratt: anjali.forber.pratt@vanderbilt.edu
